- Continuation of 11. does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because: A Applicant argues "... those Internet sites which do not request to the system server 110 for assigning channel numbers are not listed in the master table 112.".
- A Broadly reading the claim, it does not suggest that all hyperlinks on a page must be numbered.
- B Applicant argues "... Nobakht fails to teach or suggest that hyperlinks embedded in a registered Internet site can be associated with index numbers.".
- B Broadly interperting the claim, without reading the specification into the claim, the claim does not require that 'all' hyperlinks be associated with an index number.
- C Applicant argues "... Nobakht does not teach any method for modifying incoming mark-up language webpage by allocating index numbers to hyperlinks on the webpage.".
- C Nobakht discloses updating a table with reference numbers for hyperlinks [paragraph 47], when that page is requested by the user, the table with reference numbers that are on that web page are modifyed to the requesting user to allow the user to choose the number referencing the hyperlink.
- D Applicant argues "It is also not agreed that Nobakht teaches creating an anchor table associating the hyperlinks with the index numbers.".
- D Nobakht discloses creating a table referencing hyperlinks to numbers [paragraph 47] and presenting the table to the user [paragraph 48].
